THURSDAY

Part II begins with the chœurs of women in an optimistic mood. The four knights come from France, claiming that they have urgent business with the king.

The four knights accuse Thomas Becket of ingratitude to King Henry II who has made him the Arch bishop. They call him a traitor.

Becket defends himself by saying that loyalty to God does not mean Disloyalty to the king.

SATURDAY

Becket demands that the Priests open the door as it is against the church's policy to prevent anyone from entering the cathedral.

The Priests feel that the church is strengthened by Becket's martyrdom.

The four knights address the audience, saying that their loyalty to the king made them murder Becket.

The priests dismiss the knights as "Last souls".
